

We already have laws sufficient to monitor a suspected criminal's activity, be it electronic or not. I don't agree that making it easier for law enforcement to snoop on unsuspecting people is going to curb or stop any crime, only further erode the privacy rights of more innocent people. Why is it that innocent people have to give up their rights so that law enforcement can stop the guys who don't play by the rules to begin with? Something is wrong when law enforcement wants to suspend my freedoms to stop someone who wants to steal my freedom. Which is the worst of the two evils there? Is that how we want law enforcement to be seen? I could say, "fine, look at my stuff, I haven't anything to hide anyway." But where does it stop?
